Arthur,

I have only received the documents recently, they were only forwarded by the solicitor on the 8th, it was subsequently redirected again which took its time..

I have given no indication that I will not sign these documents. I am busy having received a new position and in the process of being audited, I just don't get the time to sit down an review and comment on the document with the objectivity and detail required.

I have not received any notice or minutes from the AGM, which I understand that I am as entitled to receive as a shareholder. This adds further to the level of distrust, I fail to see who THEY are trying to provoke. I have notified Michael to this effect in writing.

I have no problems with people who inject $$$ into the company to be paid back the same as they have injected plus an agreed interest rate, I do have a problem with people undermining the share structure once what appears one of the shareholder has served their purpose. I believe my solicitor has made very clear, agree to keep the share holding as its was at start-up and I will sign anything within reason. I am not deliberately provoking anyone.

I fail to see how any director can say they are acting in the best interest of the company when they are not looking out for the companies best interests rather their own pockets. The "costing us thousands!" could have been resolved a long time ago by negotiating with my solicitor, the directors have indicated this is not going to happen.

Regards

Andrew
